“Those are a direct threat to public health.” Since 2007, the agency has sent dozens of warning letters to companies telling them to stop making those types of claims about their supplement products.

The dichotomous choice approach has also been shown to be incentive-compatible: provided that respondents understand that provision of the good depends on the majority of votes, and the respondent’s own vote in itself cannot influence such provision, truth-telling is in the respondent’s best interest (Hoehn and Randall, 1987).
